

AN ACTIVE CHOICE

When is a choice not active? When you make it, but don't follow through. When it is still just one of the options that the world offers you. When the choice follows the trail of our perception, without going beyond the paths of this world and, consequently, beyond the way you see yourself.

Ask yourself a small question as you contemplate the world around you: Do I want to face my choices passively or actively? Passively, the world dictates your choices. Your options will always be associated with the laws of this world. In active choice, there is the understanding that is present in the interaction. There is recognition that all perceived meaning is given by me. What I see reflects only the state of my mind. And what mind would perceive a sick and guilty world, reacting to evil things? Would it be the one that thinks and can choose – or the one that survives shaped by the lessons of this world?

When is my choice active? When I truly choose to interact with myself. When I contemplate the world around me outside the perception of fear. When I recognise that nothing exists beyond the Mind. When I observe the world without a shadow of doubt about my power – to create and recreate infinitely as the cause of my Existence. When I use the world as I use a mirror. When it serves to redirect me, always, to myself. I do not exist beyond the Mind, and nothing I create will exist outside of It.

Me and everyone else are One. And then... when the world finally mirrors only Light – a Light as clean and beautiful as my own – the confusion of who I am and what the world is will cease to exist. Everything is One. And nothing beyond that carries us forward.

Contemplate yourself.

When you are ready,

you will find yourself inside your mind,

waiting to be found.

Then you will remember that you are One with Him

and with gratitude,

you will also remember the world

created by the desire of the one who waited to be found.

EXERCISE

Choose actively. Mirror the Mind. Make yourself available to remember the One Who thinks with you: What choice am I making right now? Is it passive (guided by fear, by reaction)? Or is it active (coming from the desire to remember Who I Am)? What does the world seem to be showing me today? What thought is it mirroring? Do not try to correct, just see: Today, I choose to use the world as a mirror of the Light that dwells within me.
